

The Journal of DementiaCare

For all who work with people with dementia

Vol 26 No 2 March/April 2018

Inside this issue...

■ Project updates & viewpoints

Loudly (but silently) finding and sharing joy 12

Mask theatre company Vamos is running an Arts Council-funded project which puts people with dementia and their carers at the centre of its work. Honor Hoskins describes the shows and how they have been received

Five-star hospitality and comfort with care 14

A central London care home for people with dementia provides a luxurious setting for its residents. Victoria Tischler interviewed the entrepreneurs behind the project

Living in Carerville 16

Linda Vipond thought she had a sound knowledge of caring as an experienced care manager for older people. But it was only when she became her mum's carer that she really began to understand

A community event to raise awareness of dementia 18

A "Community of Practice" set up in Northamptonshire wanted to raise awareness of dementia, but the question was how to do it. Then they had the bright idea of a Memory Day, as Alison Ward and colleagues explain

New tech keeps an eye on patients 20

Camera-based technology is being used to monitor the health of dementia patients in a Midlands hospital. Dr Alex Kakoullis argues that the project is justified despite concerns about privacy and dignity

■ Features

Involving young players in football reminiscence 22

Sporting reminiscence can have a significant impact on wellbeing, but what happens when the experience becomes intergenerational? Ian James and colleagues found out

Challenging expectations of life with dementia 25

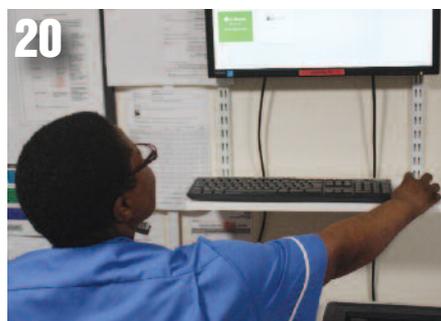

Most care homes in Scotland are doing well with implementing the Standards of Care for Dementia. However, as Heather Edwards found, there are key areas where improvement is still needed

Understanding the barriers facing BAME communities 28

What are the barriers confronting ethnic minority communities attending memory services? Jasmine Martinez and Naomi Wynne-Morgan devised a research project to find out

Peer support, expert help and social interaction 32

Sarah Robens and Lisa Smith wanted to know how a "Memory Matters" education and advice course was experienced by participants. They share the results of their evaluation
