

The Journal of DementiaCare

For all who work with people with dementia

Vol 26 No 5 September/October 2018

Inside this issue...

■ Project updates & viewpoints

Toilets: no laughing matter 12

Toilets as a subject of conversation may raise a smile, but when it comes to dementia they are no laughing matter. Mary Marshall explains why

Game on! A new learning tool for staff 14

Despite being a source of mental, physical and social stimulation, gaming technologies have been slow to catch on in dementia care. Ben Hicks says a new online learning platform for staff may be the answer

Making a film on co-research with people with dementia 16

Eric Barton and Lesley Calvert team up with colleagues to report on their experiences of making a short film with ITN Productions about their role as co-researchers on the Neighbourhoods and Dementia Study

■ Features

'My Nature' – an effective tool for residential care 18

Venturing into the great outdoors is good for health and wellbeing, but access to green spaces can be difficult for older people with dementia in care homes. Wendy Brewin, Noreen Orr and Ruth Garside describe the "My Nature" activities toolkit designed to solve the problem

Caregiver Appraisal Model Understanding and treating behaviours that challenge 22

Behaviours resulting from unmet needs may mean that family carers can no longer cope. Debbie Sells and Alan Howarth describe a model developed to support carers in understanding and dealing with behaviours that challenge

Frontotemporal dementia: the real lived experience 28

Severe symptoms are to be expected in people with behavioural variant frontotemporal dementia, at least according to the official diagnostic criteria. But is this always the lived experience? Reinhard Guss and colleagues conducted interviews which told a rather different story

Personhood in dementia: a case study 30

What is personhood and how can it be maintained in someone with dementia? Commenting on a case study of "Helen", written by her husband and caregiver "David" (pp32-33), Ilina Singh and Philip Wilkinson argue that supporting relationships is key, both for the person with dementia and, crucially, their caregiver

Cover photographs and those on pp18-21: sincere thanks to Wendy Brewin and colleagues, the Sensory Trust and all involved in developing and piloting the "My Nature" activities toolkit.

Regulars

- Comment by Debbie Abrahams 5
- News 6
- JDC Asks 10
- Perspectives by Mark Ivory 13
- Research reports 35
- Books 37
- Resources 37
- Events 39