

The Journal of DementiaCare

For all who work with people with dementia

Vol 25 No 5 September/October 2017

Inside this issue...

■ Project updates & viewpoints

The cognitive daisy in residential care 12

Petra Pollux and John Hudson developed the “cognitive daisy” as a simple guide to the cognitive status of care home residents. Care is better adapted to residents’ needs as a result, they argue

Love is listening 14

Virtuoso percussionist Dame Evelyn Glennie used her listening skills to make meaningful connections with care home residents with dementia. Helen Scott explains how the Love is Listening project worked

ARCH: active residents in care homes 16

Too few care home residents get the chance to engage regularly in meaningful activity, yet it can have a powerful impact on wellbeing. Julia Wood, Liezl Mari Anderson and Raymond Smith look at how an “active residents” programme is helping

‘It ain’t what you do, it’s the way that you do it’ 18

Pre-assessment counselling is helping to minimise anxiety surrounding the diagnostic process. Anna Buckell and colleagues discuss findings from their early intervention service

Young dementia: together in perfect harmony 20

Singing in harmony creates togetherness and belonging among people with young onset dementia. Claire Watts and Sabrina Findlay report

■ Features

The stuff of life 22

David Sheard explains why the quality of interior engagement in care homes is so important

Dementia and sight loss: a challenging combination 26

Sight loss affects tens of thousands of people with dementia, but with the right understanding, education and awareness, they can be supported to live well. Paul Ursell and Gemma Jolly show how one influential committee is making a difference

Music therapy: positive results, changes that last 28

Ming Hung Hsu explains how music therapy can help care professionals respond better to the needs of people with dementia, reducing distressing symptoms and improving quality of care

Living with PCA: ‘just take everything day by day’ 30

Nazneen Bamji and Christina Maciejewski discuss the rare form of dementia known as posterior cortical atrophy (PCA). They draw on the experience of Linda Hall, who was diagnosed by Cardiff memory team at the age of 59

Mnemonic techniques: how to CEASE stress and distress 32

Fionnuala Edgar describes how using different methods of teaching and learning – experiential learning and simplifying key concepts – had the potential to bring about practice change in a way that had not been achieved previously

Front cover and photos on pp22-25: Grateful thanks to Dementia Care Matters and all the care homes featured in David Sheard’s article “The stuff of life”.

Regulars

- Comment by Paola Barbarino 5
- News 6
- Dementia Diaries 10
- JDC Asks 10
- Perspectives by Mark Ivory 13
- Research reports 35
- Books 37
- Resources 37
- Events 39