

The Journal of DementiaCare

For all who work with people with dementia

Vol 27 No 1 January/February 2019

Inside this issue...

■ Project updates & viewpoints

The Dementia-Friendly Hospital Charter: its impact and future 14

In the first of a new series on good practice in hospital dementia care, Vicki Leah and Jo James report on the impact of the Dementia Friendly Hospital Charter and explain why it has been relaunched

Young onset dementia: bridging the diagnosis gap 16

Diagnosis rates for young onset dementia languish well below those for people aged over 65. Jacqueline Hussey and Leena Reddy argue that this is unacceptable and issue a call for radical change

Disruptors or innovators? 18

In the last issue of JDC, David Sheard argued for disruptive culture change in care homes. But Lynne Phair asks whether calling innovators "disruptors" is merely a rebranding exercise

Dementia is a cognitive disability: it's time to act 19

Action is needed on the rights of people with dementia, insists Peter Mittler, who argues that they are still subject to discrimination by government

A direct dementia referral pathway 20

Early diagnosis can help people to live well with dementia, but what if GPs omit to make the necessary referrals? Beverley Drogan came up with an ingenious answer

■ Features

Making, shaping and celebrating together 24

Roz Austin explains how co-facilitating poems with her late granny, Wendy McNay, resulted in a remarkable book of poetry called Sweet Memories. "Creating the poems connected us together again," she says

Technology helps people stay healthy at home 26

Does technology have the answers to early identification of health problems in dementia? Helen Rostill and colleagues discuss the early findings from their pioneering study: Technology Integrated Health Management (TIHM) for dementia

Frontotemporal dementia: how we are failing families 30

Frontotemporal dementia often manifests itself in behavioural changes rather than memory deficits, yet it may go unrecognised. The consequences can be disastrous, as Lynne Ramsay, F Katharina Reichelt and Ian James report

The WHELD programme: showing the benefits 32

Do person-centred care and social activity benefit people living with dementia in care homes? Lucy Garrod, Jane Fossey and Clive Ballard discuss the results of the WHELD study and implications for practice.

Front cover – Spring in their step: Kilmarnock care worker Magdalena Godlewska is pictured with Springhill care home resident Andy Wallace. They are celebrating a ratings upgrade for their care home from the Care Inspectorate. Following a takeover by Silverline Care, it has been awarded grade 4 (good) in all categories. Manager Eileen Welch thanked staff for their "passion for continual improvement".

Regulars

- Comment by Jill Manthorpe 5
- News 6
- Dementia Diaries 9
- UKDC 2018 report 10
- JDC Asks 13
- Research reports 35
- Books 37
- Resources 37
- Events 39