Slow living: a care home in lockdown 14

Care homes have been stretched to the limit – and beyond – in the pandemic, but Charlie Hoare also found a gentler side to life during lockdown. Also, the growing use of technology for communicating with families has exciting potential, he reports

'Therapeutic lying': feelings are the key to our response 16

Always telling the truth may look like a simple matter of professional integrity. But Shirley Pearce argues that feelings are sometimes more important than facts

Dementia care services and minority ethnic communities 18

Dementia incidence is rising faster among minority ethnic groups than it is among the white population. Sahdia Parveen and colleagues give their key recommendations for services, based on an evidence review

Family carers need more support than ever 22

Victoria Lyons and Caroline Woodcock consider the many ways Covid-19 and the lockdown has affected families living with dementia

An audiobooks service for hospital patients with dementia 23

A hospital library that had nothing directly to do with patients living with dementia was turned into one that did. Jason Ovens tells the story behind its audiobooks service

The CASCADE project: exploring a 'guest house' concept 24

A Dutch "guest house" concept offers a new approach to dementia care before and after a hospital stay. Raymond Smith and colleagues explain how it is being introduced in the UK

The voices of people with dementia, loud and clear 26

Scottish activists pioneered the assertion of rights for people with dementia across the globe. Philly Hare and Arlene Crockett chart this history in their new book Loud and Clear

■ Features

Self-assessment to raise standards of hospital care 28

How best to raise standards of hospital dementia care? As part of our hospital series, Jane Gilby says there is no better answer than self-assessment based on the Dementia-Friendly Hospital Charter

Reducing inappropriate polypharmacy in care homes 30

An older adult may take several medicines and heighten their risk of side effects. Aiysha Saleemi, Caroline Chill, Mandeep Butt and Aileen Jackson report on a care home project to reduce the use of multiple medications

A valuable specialist role to support end of life care 32

How can staff be supported to deliver better end of life care in community settings? Marie Poole and colleagues describe how a new Dementia Nurse Specialist (DNS) intervention was implemented and tested in primary care, arguing that the role could meet the requirements of recommended best practice

How dementia affects sight and visual processing 36

Visual impairment is common among people with dementia and may go untreated even when it is treatable. In the first of two articles on the impact of dementia on eyesight, Marianne Piano considers treatable sight loss and visual processing pathways in the brain
